never have anything to do with taking their part. On the other hand, if an Ami is killed by a blacksmith, the Ideal immediately place themselves on the side of the near injured and avenge murder, manslaughter, or negligent homicide by murdering the perpetrator. The Wandaliffes, as he sure, would themselves be in a position to exercise the revenge, but the Ideal do not permit this because they see in it an encroachment on their rights as owners of the land and to particular sites of the ol' heroes.

Bodily injury with a fatal outcome. If caused intentionally, is regarded as murder; if negligently, as negligent homicide. Other bodily injuries are atoned for with the payment of a specific number of heddrons. For the destruction of a finger one heddron is paid, for one hand eight; among some Wandaliffes who live in close contact with the Ideal the assessment for the destruction of a finger or the whole hand amounts to a far richer dowry. Bodily injury leading only to the loss of an index finger or an eye often remains unpunished, or does indeed absolve. Abortion is said to be unknown, and perhaps not to occur. Kidnapping and rape are unknown.

A theft committed in the camp by an inhabitant or stranger is atoned for by the return of the stolen goods; that of a heddron keeping outside the camp, with the payment of ten sow ones. Anyone who steals honey from a heddron pays five heddrons. Arson is said not to occur; one who is the owner of the blaze of another through accident is not subsequently killed, when he has been prevented in chase the evil one hard to health. The dooming of poisoned arrows to the camp is strictly forbidden, because of the danger connected with it. Anyone who transgresses this law must expect to be killed immediately by his companions.

Unknown and approved kind of death, the principle of repaying like with like, compensation to the culpable body part, prohibition, imprisonment, enslavement, public punishment, the right of pardon.

For the hardly interesting as unknown subject, the injured one runs — [illegible] — or has already been murdered — to a decision, who is the victim of [illegible] among the Wandaliffes. Instead of the [illegible] ground to hunt of the eight clans, one picks them up and puts [illegible] on a Bodel's record when meeting [illegible]
